GAS EXPLOSION.

Man Severely Burned But Machine Stands the Test.

Johnson, a bartender at the Empire, unwisely inspected a gas tank in the cellar with a light last night. He was severely burned in the hands and face. L. H. Dee was looking for his man at the Queen's hospital this morning, but he had not been taken there.

C. W. Macfarlane, agent for the acetylene gas plants, made an investigation this morning. He found that the gas had been flickering owing to water in the pipes. Johnson opened the carbide pot, while holding a lantern in close proximity. Only a small quantity of gas ignited. There was a large amount of gas in the generator, but the machine is so perfected it could not explode. Mr. Macfarlane regards the accident as really a conclusive test, proving the perfection of the apparatus. The one precaution insisted on, but which was violated by Johnson, is that escaping gas must not be approached with a burning light.

AGAINST CONTRACT LABOR.

By today's steamer will be forwarded to Washington the petition against the continuance of the contract labor system in this territory. The petition was gotten up by Dr. W. S. Nobbitt at the suggestion of a Congressional friend. Already the name of 145 Americans have been signed to the document. "We could have got more said Dr. Nobbitt but we got news by the last steamer that Congress would probably give Americans what they want and kill the contract system."
